

FASHION Monday June 22, 2009 1:06PM

Need It Now: UV Protective Clothing

Cover, the sun-protective clothing collection, is coming to the Hamptons, straight to the Theory store on Newton Lane in East Hampton, New York. The full range of American-made nylon/spandex pieces provide SPF 50, so wearing one of their looks is akin to slathering on sunscreen—and you can still get wet. The line, created by Lisa Moore and Robyn Stevens, quickly took on a more personal mission when Moore's sister, Lindsey, developed melanoma at 23 (she is now cancer-free). "I was so happy we had already started work on Cover," says Moore, "We can help young girls be more mindful of protecting their skin." We love that all the pieces can be tailored to your liking (you can even take scissors to them because, according to Moore, "the fabric does well with a raw cut") and they are perfect for sports enthusiasts (Stevens is a competitive tennis player and runner). All that, and the long white racer-back dress works over any bathing suit.

—Stephanie LaCava

Edited by Virginia Tupker

Cover short-sleeve swim tee, $85; coverclothing.com.

Photo: David Sims (image); Liam Goodman (shirts)

tags: Stephanie LaCava

vogue daily

Beauty, Health, and Fitness

Fashion

More Life With André

People Are Talking About...

The Hamishsphere

The Scene

Vogue's Best of Summer Week

Everything you need to know now

plus our most-wanted summer wardrobe essentials >

